

Short Courses, Executive Refreshers in Vancouver: Register Soon!

Diane Lang, Director
CSE Short Courses

What better way to begin your time in Vancouver than to attend one of the CSE short courses before the annual meeting? All four courses are packed with cutting-edge information, and the faculty are first rate!

The short course for journal editors, organized by Robert D Utiger and presented on 14-15 May, will address issues of peer review, editorial boards, decision-making, authorship, journal-office operations, and ethical and legal issues.

The short course for managing editors, organized this year by Julie Steffen, will be presented on 15 May and will include information on managing editorial boards; managing editing, production, and vendors; and managing change.

The short course for manuscript editors, organized by Margaret Perkins, will be presented on 15 May and will cover levels of editing, formatting and editing tables and figures, statistics for editors, and advanced grammar.

The short course on electronic publishing solutions, organized by Nancy Wachter, will be presented on 15 May and will address such issues as digital art, revenue through online content, financial aspects of Web publishing, and content management.

Each short course combines didactic lectures and group discussion, and each attendee receives a binder of resource information and notes to take home for future reference.

In addition, if you have ever attended a short course in the past, you are eligible to participate in the Executive Refresher program. This program allows short-course alumni to register for a single session in any of the current short courses for a nominal fee. Most sessions last 1 hour, and the courses have been organized so that it's possible to attend more than one session in a day.

For more information about the short courses and the Executive Refresher program, see the CSE preliminary program or go to the CSE Web site at www.CouncilScienceEditors.org.
